But NBC's beloved mockumentary sitcom wasn't always as popular as its present-day fame - and popular meme presence - shows. In fact, the show could have been canceled after its second season if it had not been for its soaring iTunes sales. As we all know, the Office has been destined to stay on air for nine seasons. It even survived the passing of Steve Carell, who played Dunder Mifflin Scranton's iconic cringey boss, Michael Scott, at the end of season 7. But it was probably the new life that the Office found on Netflix that transformed the show into the meme that created the viral juggernaut it called today. Although the Meme inspired by The Office has been popular throughout the show, being one of the most watched shows on Netflix at the height of meme culture, it has become a real sign of online humor. Netflix gave young viewers who had never seen Office on TV the opportunity to watch the movie for the first time, and fans who loved the movie during the initial run to watch it again and again. In return, like Spongebob Squarepants, the show became one of the most memed shows in internet history. And from Michael yelling No God, please don't! to Jim (John Krasinski) and Dwight's (Rainn Wilson) infamous It's your birthday sign, it really seems like there's an office reaction gif for quite a few occasions. Now, Netflix has announced that Office will leave in January 2021 to move to NBCUniversal's new streaming service. But before that happens, TIME is here to rank the best The Office memes ever that the show has inspired in the nearly 15 years since its March 2005 premiere – and boy, are very much to choose from. Because as long as the Office's silly workplace comedy is still relevant to the modern world, people will keep watching and memes will continue to flow. Why do moments from the Office easily lend themselves to memes? If you've never heard of the Office and someone told you that it's about the daily lives of people who work at a paper company in Scranton, Pennsylvania, you probably wouldn't be too interested in watching it. But that description doesn't account for the show's inescapable slapstick comedy and sharp satire about contemporary work culture. For those reasons and more, the Office continues to keep people coming back for more. Reddit user Mike Lazenby, a longtime mode executive of /r/dundermifflin, told TIME that, thanks to review, subreddit is more active than ever. Everyone finishes the movie and goes straight back to the beginning. You simply can't watch once and never shoot back to it, he said. It's interesting to see that the program still reaches new levels of popularity. And, according to Lazenby, it's the undeniably addictive Quality Office property that makes it so memeable. Have you ever seen a GIF one of your favorite lines from a movie or show and you can hear it being said in your head? There are a hundred lines from the show that will stick with you that way, you simply never get tired of them, he said. I think it's fair to say that there is an Office GIF suitable for every possible response. We couldn't agree more. Below is the Office's top 10 best meme rankings. 10. The office meme where Andy apologizes to him upset you Season 3, Episode 14: The Return Ever get a snarky response from someone when you're just trying to be nice? Andy Bernard (Ed Helms) knows what you're going through. After trying and failing to win Michael over in the wake of the Stamford branch's merger with Scranton, a sore Andy segues out of the conversation with this passive positive apology. Of course, he followed it up by punching a hole in the wall, ruining any chance he was keeping calm, cool and collecting. 9. The Office meme where that's what she said Obviously, Michael Scott didn't coin the phrase, That's what she said. But he certainly contributed to a revival in its popularity among Office fans. Michael's NSFW response to anything remote can be understood as sexual innuendo has become his signature slogan throughout the show and is often uttered with the smallest provocation. It has been regularly worked by memers hoping to recreate the cympty magic of him uttering those words loudly. 8. The office meme where Dwight puts down the cold, hard false event! If you're a fan of The Office, you probably can't help but read that in the voice of one and only Dwight Schrute. As Assistant Regional Director, one of Dwight's favorite pastimes is to fix his colleagues in the most subtle way possible, loudly claiming that what they say is wrong! When Jim pranked Dwight by imitating him, he even threw in his own false claims! to bring home impersonostors. And so the Schrute event meme, an image of Dwight overlaid with text imagining how he would dismiss various reports, was born. This is mostly useful for getting on people's nerves in classic Dwight style. 7. The office meme where Michael is Beyoncé, always Season 6, Episode 25: The Chump After Michael discovers that Donna (Amy Pietz) is cheating on her husband with him, Andy, who was deceived by Angela (Angela Kinsey), tries to teach him a lesson about what it feels like to realize someone is being unfathly with you. Referring to the 2009 horror film Obsessed, Andy asserts that Michael is the villain, Ali Larter, in this script while he is the hero, Beyoncé. Michael's reaction to this logic remains one of the most perfect returns of all time: I'm Beyoncé, Always. This answer not only shuts down pretty much any further verses, it also establishes that no matter what others think, in your mind, you can always be the hero of your own story. Not to mention that this reaction gif is essential for whenever Queen Bey Bey again how perfect she is - which happens quite often. 6. The Office meme where Kelly has a question Season 4, Episode 15: Night Out After being promoted to the company, Ryan returns to Scranton to get acquainted with his former branch with Dunder Mifflin's new website, Dunder Mifflin Infinity 2.0. But Kelly (Mindy Kaling) has no intention of let him get out easy for her dumping. So when Ryan asked if she had a question in her meeting, Kelly didn't waste the opportunity to make her feelings known. Well, I have a lot of questions, she retorts. Number one, how dare you? It pretty much goes without saying, but this is the perfect meme to have in your back pocket when you need to capture the sheer outrage of an unfair situation – like, for example, the Office leaves Netflix. 5. The office meme where Michael is ready to get hurt again Season 4, Episode 14: Chair Model Who else would give us the final relationship meme otherwise Michael Scott, king of being unlucky in love? After breaking up with Jan (Melora Hardin) and becoming infatuated with a chair catalogue model, as one does, Michael asks his staff to set him up with some of their female friends (using the model as a detailed plan). Pam eventually agrees to give Michael the number of her hostess, whom she describes as really sweet.. As usual, Michael royally screwed the situation up, but not before gifting fans with one of the most relevant post-breakup lines in television history: There's no question about it, I'm ready to get hurt again. Thanks to the constant fluctuations in people's relationship status, memes for this are always in demand. 4. The office meme where Pam feels God in Chili's Season 2, Episode 1: The Dundies Who among us didn't have a few too many in a night out with colleagues? That's where the relatable queen Pam Beesly (Jenna Fischer) comes into play. After knocking down some drinks to soothe her nerves once again getting Dundie for The World's Longest Pledge, Pam was called onto the stage for the Whitest Sneakers award. Her tipsiness and surprise then combined to produce the greatest acceptance speech of all time: I want to thank God for giving me this dundie. I feel God in this chili tonight. Later in the episode, Pam is given a lifetime ban from Chili's for sneaking alcohol. But that didn't stop Fischer from trying to review the character's crime scene. In 2017, she tweeted a photo of herself standing outside the restaurant with a guilty look on her face. Should I try to come in?, she captioned the image, prompting the official Account of Chili to provide the only appropriate response we hope you feel God tonight, before lifting her ban. During a 2018 appearance on The Late, On the show, Fischer told host James Corden that she prepared for the scene by going out and getting drunk with her BJ actor Novak, who plays fireman Ryan Howard. I had a drink, and he asked me how I felt and we analyzed it. Then I had drinking and he asked me how I felt. And then I had a drink, she said. I don't remember much after that. But I studied it! The iconic line has since been memed a lot and is often used in response to a script that unexpectedly goes your way. 3. Meme Office where Jim looks at the camera One of the best parts of The Office is that the show is framed as a documentary that allows the characters to break the fourth wall in hilarious ways. After all, it was that formula that gave us Jim Halpert a direct look at the camera whenever something particularly awkward or ridiculous happened. Jim's many looks of nasty disbelief have taken on a life of his own on the internet over the years, with office fans regularly using their GIFs in response to bizarre online events. Even just write some variations of the sentence, Look at the camera as I'm on the Office, usually enough to get points on. 2. The Office meme where Stanley didn't stammer Season 4, Episode 16: Did I stammer? When Michael tries to get Stanley involved in a brainstorming session on how to incite the office instead of ending his morning crossword, Stanley takes drastic measures to ensure that Michael understands how much he wants to be left alone. Of course, while it serves to get your point across, yelling at your boss in a company-full meeting doesn't usually come across very well. And that's exactly why this moment became a classic office immediately - it's something that can only really happen at Dunder Mifflin Scranton. Now, the meme I've stammered? often used to convey the message that no one needs to question a statement that has been made. 1. The Office meme where Michael needs to know why Season 2, Episode 22: Casino Night There are so many laugh-out-loud cases of Michael hating about human rights representative Toby Flenderson (Paul Lieberstein) that it was tempting to fill this list with just moments (I hate so much about the things that you choose to be , You are a thief of pleasure, etc.) But in the name of love spread, we have settled for only the time that Michael questions the nature of who Toby is as a person after Toby tells him that it is inappropriate to invite children to Dunder Mifflin Scranton's casino night party. No other line gets into the heart of why Michael hates Toby over the simple question, Why are you in the way that you are? And then it became many Office fans' going to react to questions about other people's shady behavior. To keep you secure, we've sent confirmation emails to the address you entered.
